

Introduction

What is Crossrail?

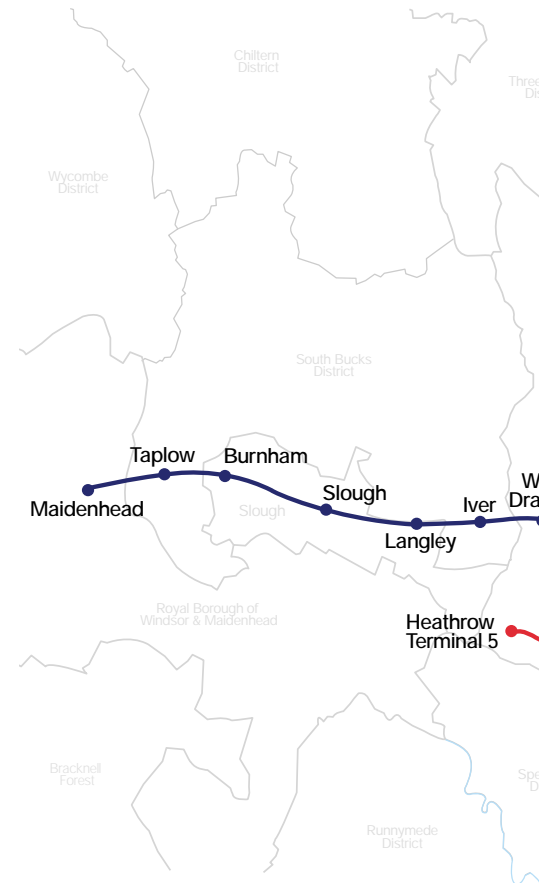

Crossrail line 1 is a proposal for a new railway to cross the capital and connect the UK. It is an exciting opportunity to deliver a brand new rail service for passengers travelling into, out of and across London. The proposal would provide better connections, quicker journey times, improved passenger comfort and a whole range of additional social and economic benefits for London and the UK as a whole.

Crossrail trains would operate using new tunnels and existing track. They would offer speedy and efficient journeys from Heathrow and Maidenhead in the west through new twin-tunnels between Paddington and Whitechapel, reaching out to Canary Wharf, Shenfield and Ebbsfleet in the east.

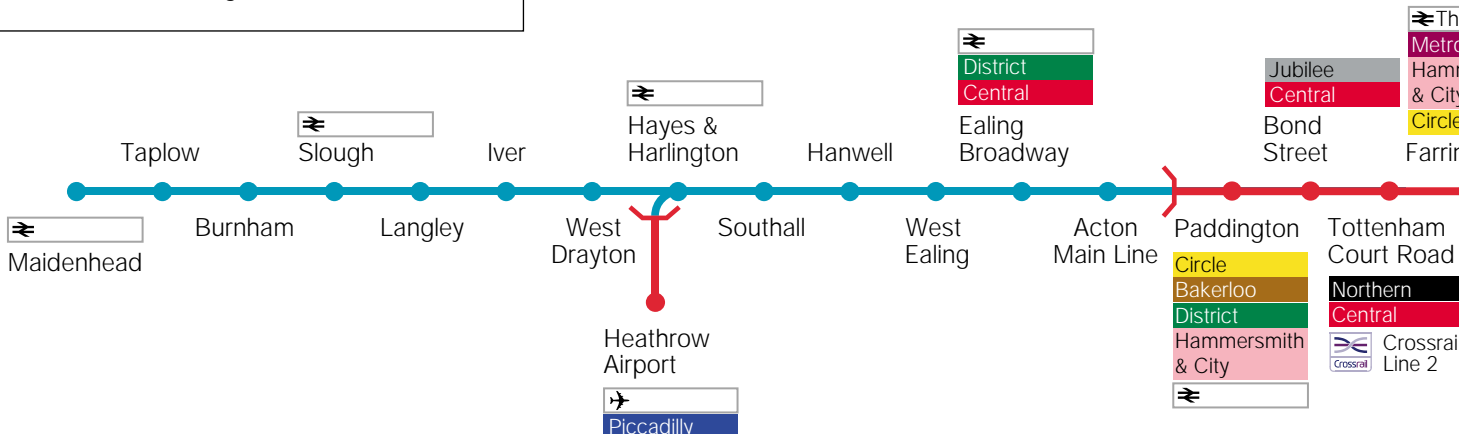

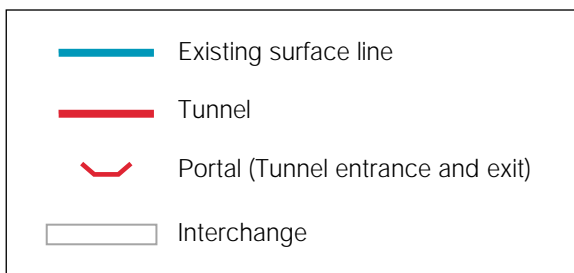

The Crossrail proposals are being prepared for submission to Parliament as a hybrid Bill where the Crossrail team would look for approval to build the project. It would take about five years to construct Crossrail, so we estimate that new trains could be running on the new network by 2013, following a year of operational testing.

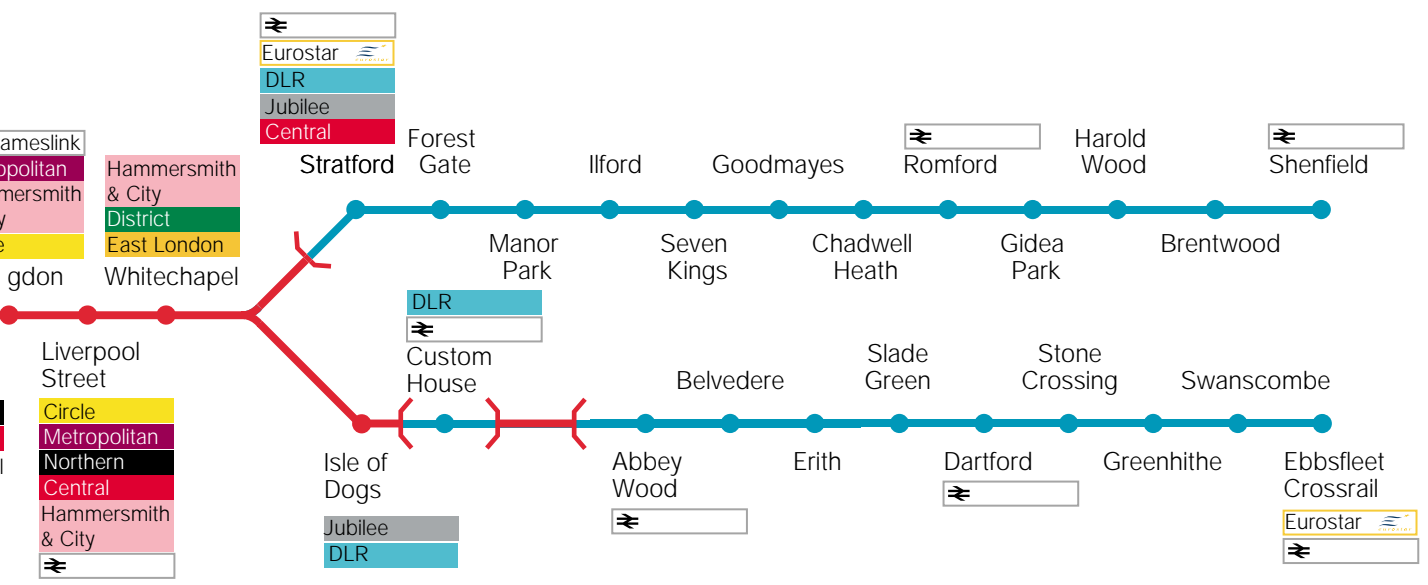

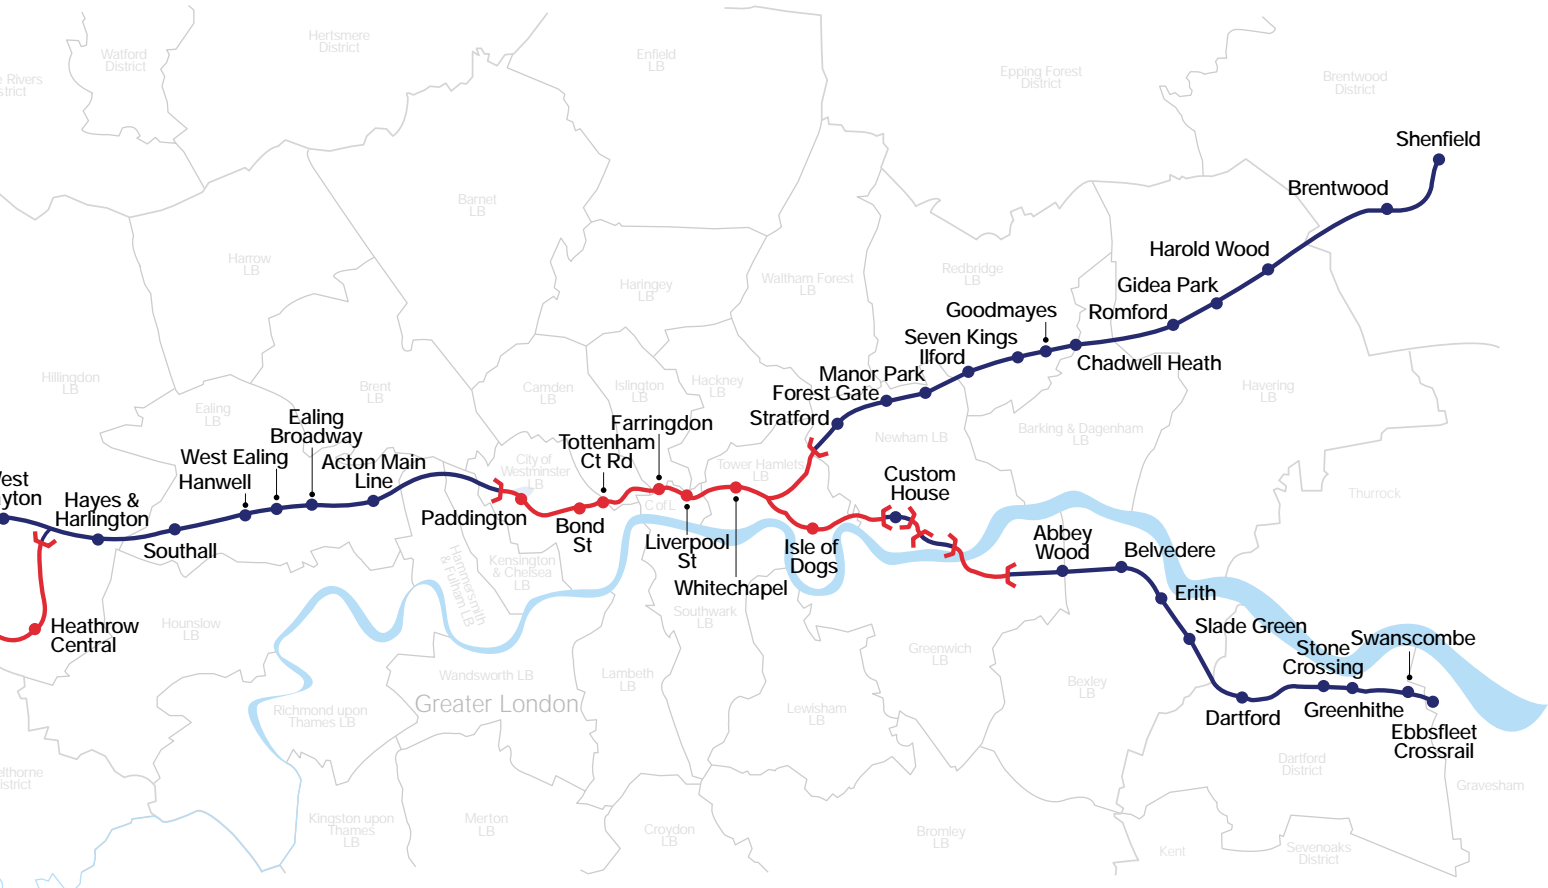

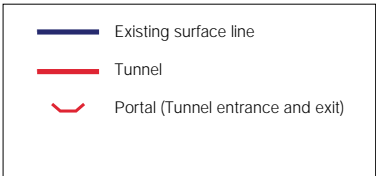

This pack contains a number of sheets, with practical information about the trains we plan to run and how we would build the new tunnels for them to run in. Please take a look at the information sheets in the pack and if you would like any further information, contact us.

Crossrail is not a new idea. Since the late 19th century, engineers and transport planners have been looking at how railways could be built to carry passengers right into and through the heart of London without the need to stop at terminus stations and transfer to alternative services. This objective – making it easier for passengers to link outlying parts of London with the City's commercial and retail centres – remains as important and relevant today as it did over 100 years ago.

Now, the Crossrail team has received backing from Government to develop proposals and submit them for a full review by Parliament where a decision would be made on the future of the project.

What happens next?

Information is provided in this pack on our proposed timetable for developing Crossrail and how we intend to deliver its benefits as quickly as possible. The Crossrail vision of improved rail services for London is coming closer to reality.

We hope that you find this Information Pack helpful. There are other documents available on request during the consultation. They can be found on the Crossrail website www.crossrail.co.uk. If you have any views or comments on the information contained here, we would welcome them.
